L O N D O N,

TO THE Candid Loyal Reader.

IF thou beest such, I will here acquaint thee, that in our late perilous Times I have been a serious Spectator of the Actions of all Parties, read most of their Publick Prints, took notice of all their strange Thwartings and Opposings, even of Government it self; their spitting (as it were) in the face of Justice, wronging the innocent, acquitting the Guilty, &c. And I have mourn'd in secret at the management of many things carried on, Torrent like, by the furious Jechus of the Age (I mean the restless dissenting Tribe) which was not in my power to remedy.

Sorry I am to say it, but it is conspicuously true, — Peace never look'd so like a War, as within these last seven or eight Years, viz. since the commencement of the late Damnable Popish Plot (as it was call'd) Anno 1678. And because our British Nation was the Stage wherein such unheard of and unprecedented Scenes of Violence have been represented, I shall here furnish my Readers with a short Summary of the Actions of those Years, as well relating to the said Horrid Plot, as to other matters which have happened in these Nations within that compass of time.

But now, I would not be thought hereby Dolores renovare, to renew the Misfortunes or ~~Miseries~~ of my Native Country, but only, as a good Pilot, set up my Mark or Beacon of Warning for after times to take notice, how? where? when? and by whom? we in this Age have been misled, that they may thereby prevent running upon the like ruinous Rocks, which had very nearly shipwrack'd us. As also, that herein as in a Mirrour, Men may behold our late pass'd Rebellious Confusions and Disorders, and be ashamed or afraid of incurring the like wicked Errors and extremes any more.

And know (good Reader) that in this Collection I intermeddle meddle not with any undue Distinctions or Characters of Persons or Parties, whereby to make any remarkable, but such as have made themselves so. I mention purely matter of Fact; and only fix here and there a gentle Asterisk upon the absurdity of some notorious Villany, and obvious for such to the World.

I am no friend to Names of Reproach, Whig and Tory are as odious, when set in opposition to each other, as formerly Round-head and Cavalier, or Papist and Puritan. I heartily wish such terms of distinction buried, that thereby we might be so wise and happy together, as to remember we are all English Men and Christians, Members of one Body Politick, Subjects to one and the same Sovereign Lord, and his Laws. It is both the Kings and Kingdoms misfortune to have such notes of Discrimination among us: nor are we obliged to the Inventors or Promoters of such Reproachful Characters, they serve only to heighten Animosities and widen Differences. And I doubt not but all sober honest Men will wish with me, That the Incendiaries which first broached them, had continued still with them either at Rome or Geneva. For, as the Artifice hath been made use of, one of the most Glorious Kingdoms in the World was thereby nearly brought to Destruction.

Howbeit, if we must be so unhappy as still to have Sides, and opposite Parties among us, and that there be a necessity for us to shew our Opinions, otherwise than by our Obedience (as if we were obliged to give every man we met the Word, as in a Garrison Besieged) Then I say, both Reason and Religion too, fully assure us, that it is, not only safe, but conscientiously just, to own what we are, and to indeavour with all our might and skill, to support our admirably and well-ordered Government, and to mark and avoid all such as are Enemies unto it. In the doing whereof we at once perform our Duty, and assert our Allegiance to God and the King, which things must needs be pleasing and delightful to all good Men; whereas to countenance Faction, either by an ingenuous neutrality, or by a publick approbation or aid, is to wound our Allegiance, dishonour God, in whose Image we are created, and advance and abet to the Devils Darling, Rebellion. A Crime which the Scripture hath justly Character'd, as equal to Witchcraft.

To the Candid Loyal Reader.

And yet, I am not so much out of love with the Principles of Religion, or Humanity, as to think that all Discontents are equally dangerous. No, some err by Example, others out of Design. The crafty Knaves (as one wittily expresseth it) drive on the zealous Fools. I readily acknowledge, that as there are good and bad Horses of all Colours, so there are good and bad men of all Perswasions. There is no Society so ill, but that some honest, just, and well-meaning Persons may be found among them, and such as may deserve our Charity, and Pity. So on the other side, there is no Company of men so good, but that some of them may deserve our Caution at least, if not our Hatred. The best Jury of Men that ever was in the World had a Devil among them!

I therefore blame not the Rabble-Rout, or Multitude so much, as I do their Johnsons, Fergusons, Alfops, &c. or designing Leaders. It is the wilful obstinate Sinner; He that makes a bold and unreasonable resistance of all the fairest motions for Unity, Peace and Concord, that is to be reprov'd; the mercenary Incendiaries on either side are to be detested, discouraged, abandoned. For they are the Men that have advanc'd the reckoning of our Publick Woes almost beyond possibility of satisfaction and accommodation.

These, I say, are the Men that have made England's Miseries much larger, and more bitter and tormenting, than twenty such Plots of themselves could ever have done.

And, finally, if private Persons, whose Families and Shops want them, are permitted still to Club, Cabal, Conventicle, or Coffee-house it, as of late Years they have done; or that others shall be wink'd at to Buffoon it in Print, and play upon Peoples Reputations, to inflame either Persons or Parties, as also hath been too commonly practis'd. We may, without Astrology, foresee, and foretel too, that both Governours and Governed will constantly, by such means, be render'd troubled and uneasie. And in time, this little Manual or Micro-chron, by an exact observance of future Anomalous Actions, will even be swelled into a Volume, which God in Mercy avert. I am
